A NOTE FROM THE Editor

See as many of you as possible next Sunday. The forecast is for 24 degrees and sunny so we can expect it to be busy.

We're pretty short on people so it will be hard work for those of us who turn up.

MORE TRAVELLERS TALES (or - the saga of the lost luggage)

Dear friends.

I had written you two very long emails that I don't think went through, trying out our new Princess friends. Anyhow, here goes (abbr.), I hope!

We arrived in Amsterdam after a wonderful cruise to Falmouth, (Land's End, in very foggy conditions), then to Cork in Ireland, loved Cork. Iceland, then Greenland. The cruise was lovely, especially our company, Gavin and Pippa.

I think I have covered most of that previously.

We left the ship to stay in London for 3 nights, always enjoy it. On the Ho Ho Bus for two days, bit of shopping, to our favourite Italian restaurant in Shaftesbury Ave for dinner one night. We sat next to a lovely young couple, he was from Denmark, and she was from Sweden. We became best friends over dinner! He was a singer/dancer, and he even gave us (me really!) a little song.

We left Heathrow and sat on the British Airplane for 2-1/2 hours before departing. U.K.'s air traffic control had a meltdown and were doing everything manually...you can imagine the chaos! Our plane was the last plane to leave, but too heavy, so they offloaded some luggage. When we arrived at Amsterdam, we realised ours were left behind. We spent 3 hours in the lost luggage queue, when we made it to the end, no luck, the next plane it was on had been cancelled. Off to the hotel, next morning back to the queue again, a little bit shorter, but still no baggage. A very helpful lady took Dave into the bowels of the airport searching, to no avail. We debated whether to cancel our cruise, but decided we probably wouldn't get any insurance. So, on board we went, luckily with our carryon luggage, with medication, Dave's camera and cpap machine.

Viking Cruises were magnificent.

The emails between administration and the tracking company were ongoing. Somehow, as both our suitcases are identical and together, mine arrived after 8/9 days, Dave's is still missing. He has requested it be sent home, if they ever find it! Everyone on the ship knew, we were the 'talk of the ship' for the wrong reasons. Even little fat American women offered me their clothes, with a little giggle. Lovely people, all concerned. The Americans we knew on our ship were fabulous people.

We did do some clothes shopping in Cologne, but it wasn't fun! We didn't know our sizing, this had to go with that, and expensive! Fortunately, we had seen Cologne a few times before.

We decided to take a break, have lunch and regroup, our marriage is too precious!

Now we could have our well-worn clothes washed by the ship's laundry free of charge. We worked out our first wash was worth AU$68!

We enjoyed our tours, but I had trouble keeping up, even with my hiking poles. Dave was my super rock still, although we were on the 'leisure' tour, and we were all incapacitated.

We met quite a few friends, especially an American couple from Salt Lake City. We had dinner together every night, exchanged communication details, and have an email from them already. Our other closer friends were two widows whose husbands died within a month of each other...more lovely Americans.

We arrived in Budapest yesterday, checked our bags (minus Dave's!), and went investigating, had lunch and enjoyed leisurely exploring, with a bit of shopping, looking for a big bag/case, to put our new clothes in.

Dinner last night was yum, we had a schnitzel each, with chips and salad. The chips covered the bottom of the plate, the schnitzel hung over the edges. Dave ate about 3/4 of his, I ate about 1/3. Slivovitz finished off the lovely meal. Schnapps equivalent.

When we arrived, we were the only customers, at 7pm, and thought we had picked a dud. Within half an hour the place was nearly full. I joked to the waitress that we lured them in, she thought that was funny. When we left, she followed us out to thank us for being so friendly, and so far her favourite guests. Nice touch.

Our unit is fantastic with a lovely little balcony, where we are now. I have now a full contingent of knickers, the ones I brought, and the ones I bought. (English lesson grandchildren!), thanks to a washing machine. The weather has been great, high 20s to low 30s each day, and balmy nights.

Early night tonight as the shuttle is picking us up at 3.30 AM!!!! Our flight to Munich and onto Florence leaves at 6am.

We then catch a bus to Lucca, Tuscany, where we will stay for 4 nights. One of our favourite places.

We hope you are all well, love from Marg and Dave,
